Just Beginning to Grow

IT is safe to say there is not a town in the west that has enjoyed for the last two years, and is still enjoying a greater measure of prosperity and a more rapid growth than Albuquerque, and yet all the signs of the times point very distinctly to the fact that the immediate future has conditions in store for us which will make the good times of the past seem dull by comparison.

For the last fifty years as population pushed westward one town after another has held the record for rapid growth, and has been pointed to by the finger of destiny as the coming great city of its section of the country, Chicago and San Francisco, Minneapolis and Galveston, Omaha and Denver, Kansas City and Los Angeles, each in turn, occupied the center of the stage has been the magnet to draw the attention of the public, offering the greatest attractions to homeseekers and the most promising investments to capital, and each in its turn has "made good" all that is promised.

Now it is Albuquerque's turn. It is located in the right place. It is far enough away from any other general distributing point. The natural resources of the country tributary to it are amply sufficient to support a great city, and they are being developed with a view to finding their market at this place. The altitude, the longitude and the latitude are all just right for business, comfort and health, and the "men behind the guns" are endowed with a spirit of energy, enterprise and pull-togetherness which makes them just the right men in the right places. Some of us have seen all this for years past, and our paramount aim has been to let the public see it. We saw it with the eye of faith, but the people now see it with the eye of business, and they are coming to get the advantage of the ground floor and anticipate the future. Our first job is successfully accomplished; our present duty is to take care of the strangers as fast as they come—and that is already taxing us to our utmost. We have builded better than we knew. The town is growing faster than the most optimistic of us had hoped for, and it is our duty now to "get a move on" and provide more accommodations for the newcomers. The most of them will build homes of their own as soon as they have time to take in the situation, but in the meantime they must be provided with temporary shelter, and that is "up to us."

If, in addition to the hundreds of substantial buildings in course of construction, a hundred good dwelling houses should be commenced tomorrow—houses that would be neither "shacks" nor mansions, but would rent for, say, $20 to $25 a month—there would be a tenant waiting for every house before it was ready to move into. That such conditions already exist is a fact that we are well aware of, and that the pressure is increasing every day is also well known. The people are coming faster than we are providing the means to take care of them, and the influx has but only just commenced. A man who has an interest in making Albuquerque a big city should put up a house to rent, if it is in his power to do so. We invited the people to come, and if we leave them now to camp on the prairie some of them may go somewhere else. And besides, there is no safe investment in the country anywhere that will pay a better rate of interest—and that rate will steadily increase as the town grows.

About the growth of the town there is no more doubt than there is about the sun shining tomorrow. It is possible, in the course of nature, that the sky of New Mexico might be so densely overcast that none of the people could see the face of the sun for a whole day, but such an occurrence is so utterly improbable that it is not worth while to consider it. And it is just as improbable that the growth of Albuquerque is going to stop now. The vast sums of money that are now being put into substantial improvements at this place, and the still greater sums that are ready to go into greater enterprises which are now being arranged for, are not being invested to meet the present demands of Albuquerque, but with a view to what the demands of Albuquerque will be when it shall have four or five times its present population. And shrewd business men do not pour out their money by hundreds of thousands in enterprises that are many years ahead of the demand.

A Roast

M. RIPLEY'S reply to Miss Tarbell's attack on the Santa Fe road gives the lady what is commonly called in newspaper parlance "a roast," and puts her before the public in a very unpleasant light. The principal grievance complained of by her was that the road had advanced the weight of crude oil in May, 1905, from 6.4 pounds to 7.4 pounds per gallon, while making no change in the weight of refined oil, and this, according to Miss Tarbell, was "a discrimination in favor of the Standard Oil Co." Now, oil is shipped in tanks, holding a given number of gallons, and as freight charges are based solely upon weight the gallons have to be reduced to pounds, and Mr. Ripley shows that crude oil weighs one pound to the gallon more than refined oil. He states that in the beginning of the oil industry in Kansas the only shipments were the refined oil. When crude oil began to be shipped it was billed at the same rate as the refined product, on the assumption that both weighed the same. In due time the mistake was discovered by the railroad's "weighing and inspection bureau," and the rate was corrected accordingly. As a matter of fact, until the correction was made, the discrimination was against the Standard Oil Co., and not in its favor, as charged by Miss Tarbell.

Mr. Ripley's reply was thoroughly conclusive and the incident might be considered as closed but for the fact that Miss Tarbell's false accusation will probably be read by the thousands of persons who may never see Mr. Ripley's correction, and, as he justly observes, will serve to inflame the public mind against corporate interests.

In reviewing this incident the Kansas City Journal says the harm that such writers as Miss Tarbell do, although doubtless unintentional, is as much to the public as to the railroads. The mischief consists in sowing the seeds of prejudice, to ripen into a harvest of irrational acts which are calculated to injure the railroads in the first instance, but which will certainly react upon the general prosperity of the country in the end.

THE Salvation Army is sending a number of unemployed Britons to Canada, where they will be put upon the land and given a chance to get along in life. There is a reasonable assurance that the men selected for assistance will deserve to do well, because they are not loafers, but merely unfortunate out of employment, but willing to put their shoulders to the wheel. It is a fine work the army is doing and every well disposed person will hope that Booth's most sanguine dreams of helpfulness will be realized.

PROFESSOR MOULTON, of the University of Chicago, says the ring theory of the solar system is unsatisfactory. And the New York Tribune says "it may be added that the ring theory of municipal politics is also highly unsatisfactory."

THE Los Angeles Times gives the insurance companies one big credit mark. It says: "Anyway it hasn't yet been proved that the insurance companies loaned any money to Cassie Chadwick."

General Stoesel is paralyzed. But no one is blaming General Stoesel for that.
The grand jury finds that the Bernalillo county court house has bats in its belly.

Emperor Francis Joseph is said to have made Taft a liberal offer to come over in Hungary and sit on the lid while.
It is presumed that ex-sheriff Hubbell knows more now than he did a while ago concerning the condition of the county jail.

To add insult to injury they hung a picture of Perfecto on the wall of Tom's cell and gave him the grand jury's report to read.
Lives of sheriffs all remind us.—Do not monkey with the court; Meditating in the slat house is a tiresome kind of sport.

The New York Sun says M. White is the most infernal liar that ever came out of the east. It is not stated whether "the east" includes insurance headquarters in Wall street.

It is alleged that the big fire at Colon has reduced that town to a semi-colon. The inhabitants, undoubtedly made a dash—but it was an asterisk his life making such puns.

The police are hunting for the wag who hung a placard, "Here lies an honest man," over the witness stand, when President McCall, of the New York Life, came forward to testify.

It appears that all the easy marks do not wear long whiskers and hail from the skin center. The Wall street institution that was bunched out of a third of a million by a bogus check last week.

Deputy Sheriff de functo Newcomer is now filling a charge of pickpocketry against Deputy Sheriff de facto Heyn for filching the celebrated jail keys from his pants pocket. And thus doth the plot thicken.

A Wichita dispatch says a Santa Fe train stopped near there to allow a woman to catch up and kiss her husband good bye. This beats the one that stops to let the passengers pick blackberries off the right of way.

The Phoenix Gazette says Golsen Millets has had the temerity to back up his wild tales about New Mexico with proof. Evidently the Gazette has not read Mr. Golsen's latest effusion wherein he says he was "badly stuffed" and is "sorely he done it."

Edna Lefevre has broken the news to the public that a "finger's dam" is not spelt with a final "n" and means the tiny wall of clay which a finger makes around the spot which he wishes to solder. It is a consolation, however, that it sounds just the same when you say it.

A Chicago youth has just had a lead pencil removed from his appendix. Whereupon the Kansas City Journal says this is a warning to always chew your lead pencil thoroughly before swallowing. It is probable that the average man will take a second thought and drink a bottle of ink instead.

Wearily Waggle—to the grand jury "Gents, me hair has turned white too meawful experience in dis country jail. For five long days dere I was without a tooth brush. And to cap de climax, honored sirs, de heartless, inhuman jailer wouldn't gimme a bar of soap. Me finger nails has not been many days for a month. Gents, kin youse let dis fearful outrage go unpunished?"

The Sabbath

Type of that everlasting rest,
(The atmosphere where angels dwell),
I hail thee with a radiant smile,
I hail thee with a sigh, as well.

The smile I give for Heaven's call
One day in seven, to mansions higher;
The sigh, because my actions fall
So far beneath my soul's desire.

For I would mount that ether stair,
And from the source of life above,
Inhale the pure, strengthening air—
The healing balm of peace and love.

Terrestrial armor round me lies,
And earthly business clogs the way
Who in the spirit, I would rise
And subjugate this dull decay.

One little day from out the seven,
Is all the King of Kings demands;
From life and health and comforts given,
He only claims this at my hands.

Is it too small, that I refuse
And turn my narrow eyes and voice?
And thus the larger blessings lose
That in the path of duty flow?

O, let not fraud my heart deceive
Or exerce against that Power,
That can bestow, or yet bereave
Within the circle of an hour.

—Eva McVair Parsons.

Brace Up!
"Stand up straight, throw your chin into the air as high as if you owned the earth—it doesn't matter whether you do or not, so you seem to," says Mme. Wade, and you cannot help walking as you should if you remember to walk on the heels of your feet. It seems reliable advice, does it not? Anyway, try it. You may lose a friend or two by that "own the earth" attitude and expression, but the probability is you will regain health and a carriage that will insure "everybody's looking at you." To achieve this effect, according to Mme. Wade, is most desirable. It is the one way by which you may know if you have really profited by the prescription. It is not a bit difficult, as any knowing woman will tell you to look straight ahead, apparently at nothing, and yet be perfectly "wise" as to whether your correct carriage attracts the eye of those you meet.—Boston Transcript.

Insomnia and Indigestion Cured.
"Last year, I had a very severe attack of indigestion. I could not sleep at night and suffered most excruciating pains for three hours after each meal. I was troubled this way for about three months when I used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and received immediate relief," says John Dixon, Tallamore, Ontario, Canada.
